Jordan prides herself on her approachable and pragmatic style in helping her clients successfully navigate various labor and employment matters. Jordan represents employers of all sizes, as well as individuals, in labor and employment litigation and negotiation.

Jordan assists clients with matters ranging from discrimination and retaliation claims, wage and hour disputes, and non-competition agreements, to workers' compensation claims. She also works closely with businesses and executives to provide guidance on personnel matters, employee handbooks, employee classification, and compliance with employment laws. Because she practices within the ever-changing landscape of employment law, Jordan particularly enjoys visiting businesses and conducting workplace trainings on a variety of issues such as anti-discrimination and harassment prevention.

Jordan litigates in both state and federal court and handles matters at the administrative level appearing before the Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities, the Department of Labor, the Workers' Compensation Commission, and other administrative agencies.
